BOCK BEER TODAY.

Once again the rampant billy goat with the flowing whiskers adorns the bill boards and show windows, and the shivering world is given notice that spring is about to make her debut. That is what the "Bock" means to all who are in touch with German folk-lore, and to many more who do not know any-thing about Castle Eimbeck, where March 22, 1896—The Right Rev. famous brew got its name, who know that Bock sounds mighty good to them about this time every good to them about this time every year. The Germans have always been a poetic people and given to gladness and innocent mirth. When they are happy they want company, not like the people who only in misery seek company and are selfish in their pleasures. The German loves social intercourse; he likes to drink his beer among friends, and that finds a high development in the family ties of the German people. family ties of the German people. Away back in the middle ages the German people found the long and cold winters tiresome, and they cold winters tiresome, and they looked forward most eagerly to the coming of spring when they could enjoy life out-doors. They celebrated with a joyous festival the coming of spring, and about the castles, which were the centers of medieval life, these festivals were of an importance equal to Christmas among the modern Germans. It was at this season and on this occasion that the castle brewer was accus-tomed to breach a special cask of beer, the best that he knew how to make, and which had lain ripening for months in the castle cellar. Being extra strong, the poetle Germans named it "Bock" beer because, like the billy goat, it was liable to knock over those who tampered with

JEFFERSONVILLE.

James Doyle, seventy-four years old, died at his home, 601 West Front street, Jeffersonville, early Monday night of Bright's disease after a long illness. He was formerly employed at the car works, but had been unable to work for several years. Mr. Doyle was a native of Ireland, but had lived in Jeffersonville about forty years. He is survived by two sons, James E, and John S. Doyle, and two daughters. John S. Doyle, and two daughters, Misses Rore and Catherine L. Doyle, with whom he lived. He was a practical and faithful member of St. Augustine's church, from where his funeral took place, Rev. Father Halpin being the celebrant of the requiem high mass.

RECOVERED.

The Rev. Father Cletus Brady, C. P., rector of the Sacred Heart Monastery on the Newburg road, has fully recovered from a severe illness of grip and is again able to resume his priestly duties. His improved condition is cause for rejoicing among the entire Passionist community.
